ABSTRACT      Grain-oriented steels are an important group of magnetic materials used in electrical engineering, most often in the magnetic circuits of transformers. The paper presents chosen issues concerning optimization of the technological process of their production, methods aimed at domain structure refinement and worldwide trends of their development.

Keywords: soft magnetic materials, transformers steel, processing technology, domain refinement techniques